Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Cantwell house is situated on the west side of S. Main St. in the heart of Berlin's historic district. The 2½ story hip-roofed frame dwelling, consisting of two sections built on an ashlar block foundation, presents the appearance of a "4-square" house with large, rectangular, back wing. Closer attention to the structure, however, reveals a Federal house sandwiched between early 20th century foundation and roof.

The front section, 3 bays across by 4 deep, is a side hall plan, the entrance being in the first bay on the left. The door surround is notably Federal with a pediment, truncated at the top, reeded pilasters and a segmented fanlight. First floor windows throughout are 9/6 with the second floor windows being 6/6.

The simpler rear section, narrower in width, evidences 20th century enclosed porches and additions, however it contains many 6/6 windows identical to those of the front section.

The interior of the house reveals clearly its Federal birth, and its link with many of Berlin's early houses. A tightly compacted stair in the corner of the entrance hall to the right of the door features a continuous ramped hand rail, with winding treads and raised paneling under the stairs. Evidence suggests the hall continued the length of the house, there being an impressive arch with carved and fluted keystone, fluted pilasters and paneled soffit and jambs which is concealed from the entrance by an intervening wall, probably part of the early 20th c. alterations. The location, to the left of the hall, of two large rooms with back to back interior wall fireplaces is a further link to Berlin's side hall plan Federal houses, although most have exterior wall chimneys. The fireplaces each feature mantels with notable Federal details. This section of the Cantwell house also contains three paneled doors with raised paneling on both sides as well as raised panels below the windows of the front parlor.

Alterations to the original floor plan, such as the wall constructed across the hall, and walls moved in the rear parlor, feature woodwork trim that is fluted, with corner blocks and seen in a number of c. 1910 Berlin houses. The original door and window surround is discernable by heavier fluting and molding and more deeply defined corner blocks.

Examination of the attic reveals a wide random-width pine floor from the original house topped by a completely new (c. 1910) roof structure.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

The Cantwell house is in one building a statement of the two major building periods in Berlin's history, specifically the early nineteenth century with well-defined Federal design and the early 20th century four-square design which was so popular during the rebuilding period following the Berlin fire of 1904. Older Berlin residents remember the house being moved to the site, probably in the 1920's, but disagreement exists as to the location of the original site. One possible original site is the Ettinger property further north on Main Street, another being on West Street. This property merits further study.
